

Tanah Lot Sunset Tour

Full Day

Elephant Trek

At the Bali Elephant Camp, you'll have the chance to learn more about Sumatran elephants from the head Mahout (elephant trainer) and ride atop these noble beasts for a 30 minute trek along the edge of a lush valley, even including a wade through their cooling off pool. You'll look down at the raging Ayung River and perhaps see monkeys and tropical birds in their natural habitat. Part of the proceeds are donated to the conservation of this magnificent species in their home island of Sumatra where they are classified as endangered

Alas Kedaton - Monkey & Bat Forest

Alas Kedaton is one of Bali's three Monkey Forests and is home to around 400 monkeys, mostly the long-tailed or grey macaque. They run free in a 12 hectare forest and yet are considerably tamer than the monkeys in Ubud, Hanging in trees at the forest's rear side, are hundreds of large bats.

Deep in the heart of the forest lies the local village temple, Pura Alas Kedaton. From any of the four gates, the holy temple is found at a lower level, unlike more common temple designs where the central holding area is at a higher level. Historic evidence suggests that the temple dates back to the pre-Hindu, megalithic period of Bali.

Pura Taman Ayun

Bordered by broad moats dotted with lilies, the temple lies amidst a beautiful park with towering trees and languid ponds. Built by the King of Mengwi in 1634 A.D. it can only be entered via a bridge leading to a richly ornamented 'candid bentar', the gate which gives access to the outer courtyard of the temple. The inner courtyard is encircled by its own little moat and is inaccessible to the public except at festival time, although the surrounding wall is low enough to give a reasonable view of the two-dozen multi-tiered meru within.

Tanah Lot

We arrive shortly before sunset as this is one of the magical spots to linger as the sun sinks behind the Tanah Lot temple standing on a rocky island just off the shore. Dedicated to the guardian spirits of the sea, the temple is said to be guarded from evil by the sea snakes that inhabit the caves below. Tanah Lot itself is not accessible to visitors, but magnificent views can be had from a variety of nearby points. Naturally, there are plenty of souvenir shops and cafes to keep you occupied before and after the dramatic end of a cultural and nature inspired afternoon journey.
